

Industry News Headlines from CLOmedia (Mar 13)

The Underemployment Wave Continues

3/28/13

Nearly 40 percent of managers are hiring more employees with college degrees for positions typically held by high school graduates, according to a recent study.

Employers More Optimistic on Growth, Talent Development Spending

3/25/13

A majority of executives are optimistic on increased spending for talent development this year, according to a new survey.

Survey: Skills Gap to Blame for Global Productivity and Revenue Declines

3/21/13

The growing deficit of skilled labor needed to fill in-demand jobs is causing a drag on employers across the globe, according to a new survey.

Women Still Underrepresented in Technical Education Programs

3/20/13

Women's groups call for improved access to education and job training for women in STEM fields.

Kelley Launches Medical MBA Program

3/19/13

The program is designed for working physicians assuming leadership roles.

Forum Focuses on Public-Private Partnerships

3/18/13

The Global Education and Skills Forum will be held annually in the UAE to promote better education.

'Millennial Madness' Campaign Aims to Take Action on Youth Unemployment

3/14/13

Non-partisan group will launch the effort at the upcoming Conservative Political Action Conference.

Study: Millennial and Mature Workers' Attitudes Align

3/13/13

The age groups that share the most workplace sentiments in common are the youngest and oldest generations, a new study suggests.

Talent Investments Not Meeting Needs

3/12/13

Most organizations reported increasing their talent investment in recent years, but just 24 percent say it has paid off, according to a new survey.

Business School Rankings Unveiled

3/12/13

Topping the list for executive education: University of Pennsylvania, University of Chicago and Northwestern University.

Poynter and McClatchy to Launch Training Initiative

3/11/13

The journalism education organization plans to work closely with the newspaper publisher to give training to employees and target evolving skills gaps.

2013 Media Tec Publishing Inc